About This Game

The choice is: the Universe — or nothing.

Near space, the future - year 2600. Your home - the training orbital station - has been destroyed by a treacherous alien attack.

There are thousands of casualties. Only one pilot has survived – and that pilot is you. Your trusty ship and your thirst for revenge will guide you to the correct orbit. On your travels, you will encounter a dangerous stranger who happens to know your childhood secrets. Space bandits will make offers that are impossible to refuse. Traveling from one planet to another, you must learn to tell traitors apart from allies. Earn yourself the reputation as a fearless pilot, a shrewd merchant, or a merciless punisher! You might even get a space station of your own one day. However, these are just plans. Right now, you need to save up some cash for repairs and a new blaster. Start the main engine – space is waiting!

On PC the controls are atrocious at best and the gameplay has no depth whatsoever. You click on an enemy, and numbers fly until someone dies. Sometime the actions stops despite not pressing any key. It's essentially impossible to scroll while moving. I've had to double click the same station 3 different times in order to dock. Retrieving loot in space makes your ship travel at a snails pace until the loot is in range. The dialog is really clunky, like a teenager writing fanfiction. I paid 0,70$ for the game and I'm still gonna get a refund.
